State of Connecticut Plans to Run 2,300 EyeDetect and Polygraph Tests Annually

Hi,

I hope your 2021 is off to a fantastic start.

The State of Connecticut's "Adult Sex Offender Services" recently started using EyeDetect to test sex offenders on a multi-year plan beginning Jan. 1, 2021. The plan calls for 2,300 EyeDetect and polygraph exams annually. Read the press release here.

With EyeDetect's 15-minute diagnostic test, state institutions, treatment providers and others can know with a high degree of certainty whether the sex offender has been honest — such as in the case of parole violations or when disclosing information about past victims.

EyeDetect is designed to test a variety of sex offenders. It can uncover offenses ("Did you commit the crime?") or re-offenses ("Did you commit the crime again?"). It's ideal for determining if a sex offender has violated parole or probation ("Have you violated conditions of parole?") and uncovering details during a sex history discussion ("Have you disclosed all victims?").

As news of the effectiveness of EyeDetect in testing sex offenders spreads, we expect many more states to adopt it for this use.

Security Firm's Success Story

Yrendagüe, a private security company based in Paraguay, started using EyeDetect for pre-employment screening in 2019. As the company increased its usage, the cost of employee turnover and terminations has been drastically reduced. In fact, in the last few months, turnover and terminations have hit zero. This is pretty impressive considering at one point employee turnover costs reached a monthly high of almost $21,000.

Effective screening of job applicants means a more trustworthy, honest workforce. Read the case study here.
